

THE CARE OF THE TEA KETTLE.

Some people think that because the tea-kettle never contains anything but clean water it need seldom be washed.

Every housewife who lives where water is hard, however, knows how the lime and other "scale" from a coating on the inside. This may be largely prevented, and the outside of the tea-kettle kept free from "soot" and grease, by washing, inside and outside, each morning, with hot water and Gold Dust.

The hard lime and other salts are dissolved by the Gold Dust and the inside of kettle will be kept smooth much longer, if thus cared for. Be sure to rinse thoroughly with hot or warm water to remove all soapy water, then re-fill with cold water for heating.

Will Load at Gulfport. The British steamship Wilhelmnia, 1682 tons net, Capt. Hugo, twenty-six days out from New Castle-on-Tyne, which arrived here yesterday, sailed yesterday afternoon for Gulfport, where she will load. She put in here for orders.

An Old Custom in Disuse. The abolition of figureheads from war vessels recalls some reminiscences of days when the ship carver's trade was at its height. A ship carver to be proficient had to be considerable of a sculptor and also a student of events and people in ancient and modern history, because he had to draw on such for many of his subjects. This trade in this country reached its palmy days in the middle of the nineteenth century, when ships were making money and no expense was spared to make them look as fine as possible. The price of carving a figurehead on a ship of 1,000 tons ran all the way in those days from $200 to $400, the time required depending, of course, on whether the figure was full length, or not, but a smart carver could turn out a full-length figure in from two to three weeks.

Figureheads almost invariably in design were in line with the name of the vessel. For instance, if a ship was named for a goddess a figure of that deity was certain to adorn her prow, or if a craft had an Indian name her figurehead was sure to be that of a head and bust or full-sized Indian. But the carving did not stop with the figureheads. The sterns of vessels in the older days always received considerable attention in this line, as well as the headboards which carried the name, while the cabins were veritable works of art, and it seemed sometimes as if they could not get ornamentation enough on the ships to please the owners. The ship carver's trade was never overcrowded, for the reason that it required a certain special training for a man to enter it. Some of the best known carvers in the last century in New England were E. S. Griffin, of Portland, William Southworth, of Bath, and Harvey Counce of Thomaston, Me., the first two of whom we believe are still living. Very few vessels carry figureheads or much carving now, but some ships and yachts are still ornamented in this way to a more or less extent.
